Kia Ora Parents

Raising children is a rewarding yet at times challenging role. As parents, we are always learning and being challenged, and rewarded, by our children as they grow up through their various stages of development.

At times your child may have issues at school with their teacher or with other children and it is important for your child and you the parent to have strategies to deal with these challenges. This article by the Parenting Place, has some very useful tips for you to use to support your child in school struggles and to help them build resilience.

If you have a concern or a complaint the school has a simple flow chart forming part of our "Concerns and Complaints Policy," that can support you in resolving issues at school.

On the contrary teaching at times can be a demanding and thankless job and teachers always enjoy receiving positive feedback when warranted. If you would like to share a celebration with your child's teacher or the Principal please email them directly.
